The Joy of Reading?

“When I read it takes me to another world, I feel happy and safe”, says Phoebe. Do you agree? Does reading take you to incredible places? Do you read at all.? Some people believe that reading is declining among young adults and teens. In a class of 26 students 23% said they never read, 23% said the read less than ten minutes a day and 15% said the read more than one hour a day.

Dyslexia

Dyslexia is a stressful diagnoses you can get as a child that makes your brain think in different ways. Dyslexia contains many different problems with reading, writing, spelling and also physical movement.

We asked a pupil at Oswestry School for an interview and this is what he said “ I was first diagnosed with dyslexia at the age of 6 and found it very hard and stressful, growing up with it is a challenge especially in school. Every Time I have to read in front of the .whole class I feel embarrassed because I miss spell words, mess up sentences and everyone reads so fast and I read slowly. It also sometimes brings me down to think there is no cure and all I can do is just keep working with it “. We also asked a learning support supervisor, his opinion about Pupils with dyslexia and what they do to help those pupils he said ” When the pupil first come to school we do tests to see if there is anything wrong with their reading or writing, if their is something wrong the teacher will have a talk to the parents and agree on some type of learning support or if it is severe they will be assessed “. But reading, writing and spelling are not the only things people can deal with there is also physical movement meaning you can be very clumsy and also they can have visual problems we’re they can dizzy from looking at black writing on a bright white page. The major thing people have to look at for is that everyone is different and take things different ways. The best way to help someone with dyslexia is to make them feel more confident in reading and writing and support them in everything.
